Private raises reach the SEC before they reach the press.

Filing Delta is a paid network that alerts investors to private rounds the day they are filed with the SEC, and pairs each one with live web data and notes from scouts whose calls are scored against the filings.

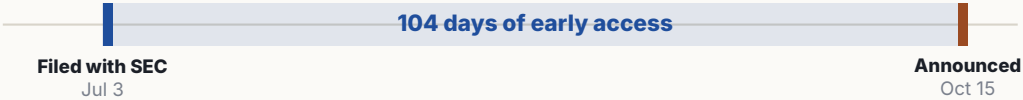
What's broken today, and what fixes it

	TODAY	FILING DELTA
Late	Databases update after the press release, weeks after the round closed.	Alerts the day a Form D hits EDGAR, while extensions and pro-rata are still open.
Expensive	About $30K a seat a year. PitchBook alone made $672M in 2025.	$49 to $499 a month, built for small funds, angels and scouts.
Unverified	The best tips move through private group chats, with no record of who was right.	Every claim links to the filing and the web page. Scouts carry a public hit rate.

Clerk Series C, 2025



Being early pays off for everyone in the round

Venture funds

Reach a founder while the round is still open, not after it is announced and allocated. Daytona's filing showed $11.7M still unsold.

Angels and scouts

Publish deal notes to paying subscribers. Each call is scored when the filing lands, so a track record becomes provable.

Founders

Opt in to share your round with verified investors, and see who is tracking you before your next raise.

Everyone else

Operators, recruiters and sellers learn who just raised before the announcement, when budgets and hiring open up.

Alerts $49/mo

New Form D filings, same day.

Delta reports $199/mo

Filing vs. live web, both sources cited.

Scout network $499/mo

Scored deal notes before the round.
